March Madness

Many a college basketball fan will soon be glued to the TV, waiting for the announcement of the NCAA Tournament pairings. But for me, I'm mad in March for another reason. I feel like March is the cruelest month of all. Just when you see the robins return, and the daffodils sprout up, here comes a big old snow storm and plunging temperatures, and it feels like winter will never leave. I don't know why this always surprises me and makes me mad. Anyone who lives in Iowa knows the weather is notorious for being unpredictable.

When I think about the unpredictable nature of March weather, it sometimes hits me that March is a lot like life. Things are going along swimmingly, and all of a sudden life throws us a curve. We thought our health scare was in the past, and then we get a new, devastating diagnosis. We thought our kids were raised and living their own successful lives, and first thing you know, we have a houseguest in our basement. We look forward to the birth of a grandchild, who is born way too early, leaving both the new babe and the family with doubts and worries. Our ordinary, happy days can be derailed very quickly by an unexpected turn of events.

No matter how long March seems or how cold it gets, it's always followed by April (which, by the way, can throw some weather curves of its own!). And so we cling tight to the old adage, "This too shall pass." Whatever the weather, either outside or in our lives, change is coming. I'm wishing you May-type weather and praying that all of your coming weather and life changes are warm and positive!
